

The problems faced by online children's programming education companies

- Poor teaching experience
- High customer acquisition costs
- Lack of localization advantage
- Low customer transfer costs

- Online and offline integration, rational use of teaching scenarios to enhance the learning experience
- Combine with offline campuses or experience stores to reduce customer acquisition costs
- Combination of online and offline, rational use of localization advantages
- Form regular learning partners offline to enhance customer stickiness